5 Fun things to do in Boston this weekend

Live it up like a debutante on the Northern Lights cruise ship, or do a paint and sip or a pub crawl. MOIRA CALLAHAN

The weekend approaches once again with its ceaseless question: What are we going to do? With our two free days from school or work, there's an expectation to make the most out of our 48 hours of "free time." But, never fear! Don't stay inside with that FOMO, there are plenty of things to do in Boston this weekend.

Harbor Brunch Cruise

Picture this: you're on a boat delicately sipping a mimosa while breathing the fresh air and taking in the sights of the Boston Harbor. That's the dream, right? (Absolutely, old sport.) Well your dreams can come true this Saturday aboard the Northern Lights cruise ship. The cruise includes a three-course brunch with seasonal fruit, assorted pastries, scrambled eggs with sharp cheddar and fresh herbs, a chosen seasonal dessert, along with a full bar. (They suggest the St. Germain, orange juice and bubbly.) Embrace your inner Gatsby and come aboard for a two-hour cruise of relaxation. March 30, 10 a.m.-noon, Northern Lights, 60 Rowes Wharf, $73+, kids allowed, fare-harbor.com

Historical Pub Crawl

History and beer, together at last. Participants can expect to visit four taverns along the Freedom Trail along with fellow travelers and an expert local tour guide. Whether you have heard the stories before or you're a newbie to Boston history, this is one history lecture that you won't fall asleep from! The tour is from 3 to 5:15 p.m., and it begins at Faneuil Hall. The historical pubs are within a few blocks of each other, and the tour is easily walkable. March 30, 3-5:15 p.m., Sam Adams Statue, 1 Faneuil Hall Sq., $34+, bostoncrawling.com

Eataly Restaurant Festival

Spring is coming, and Eataly Boston's chefs are working hard in the kitchen to create the perfect Italian spring-time menu. Eataly is celebrating the impending arrival of May flowers by putting on a two-week restaurant festival. At any of their four full-service restaurants, you can select two courses from a dedicated prix-fixe menu for $18! Complete your meal in Italian fashion with a perfectly paired $25 bottle of wine. March 18-31, Eataly Boston, 800 Boylston St., $18+, eataly.com

Gentle Stretch

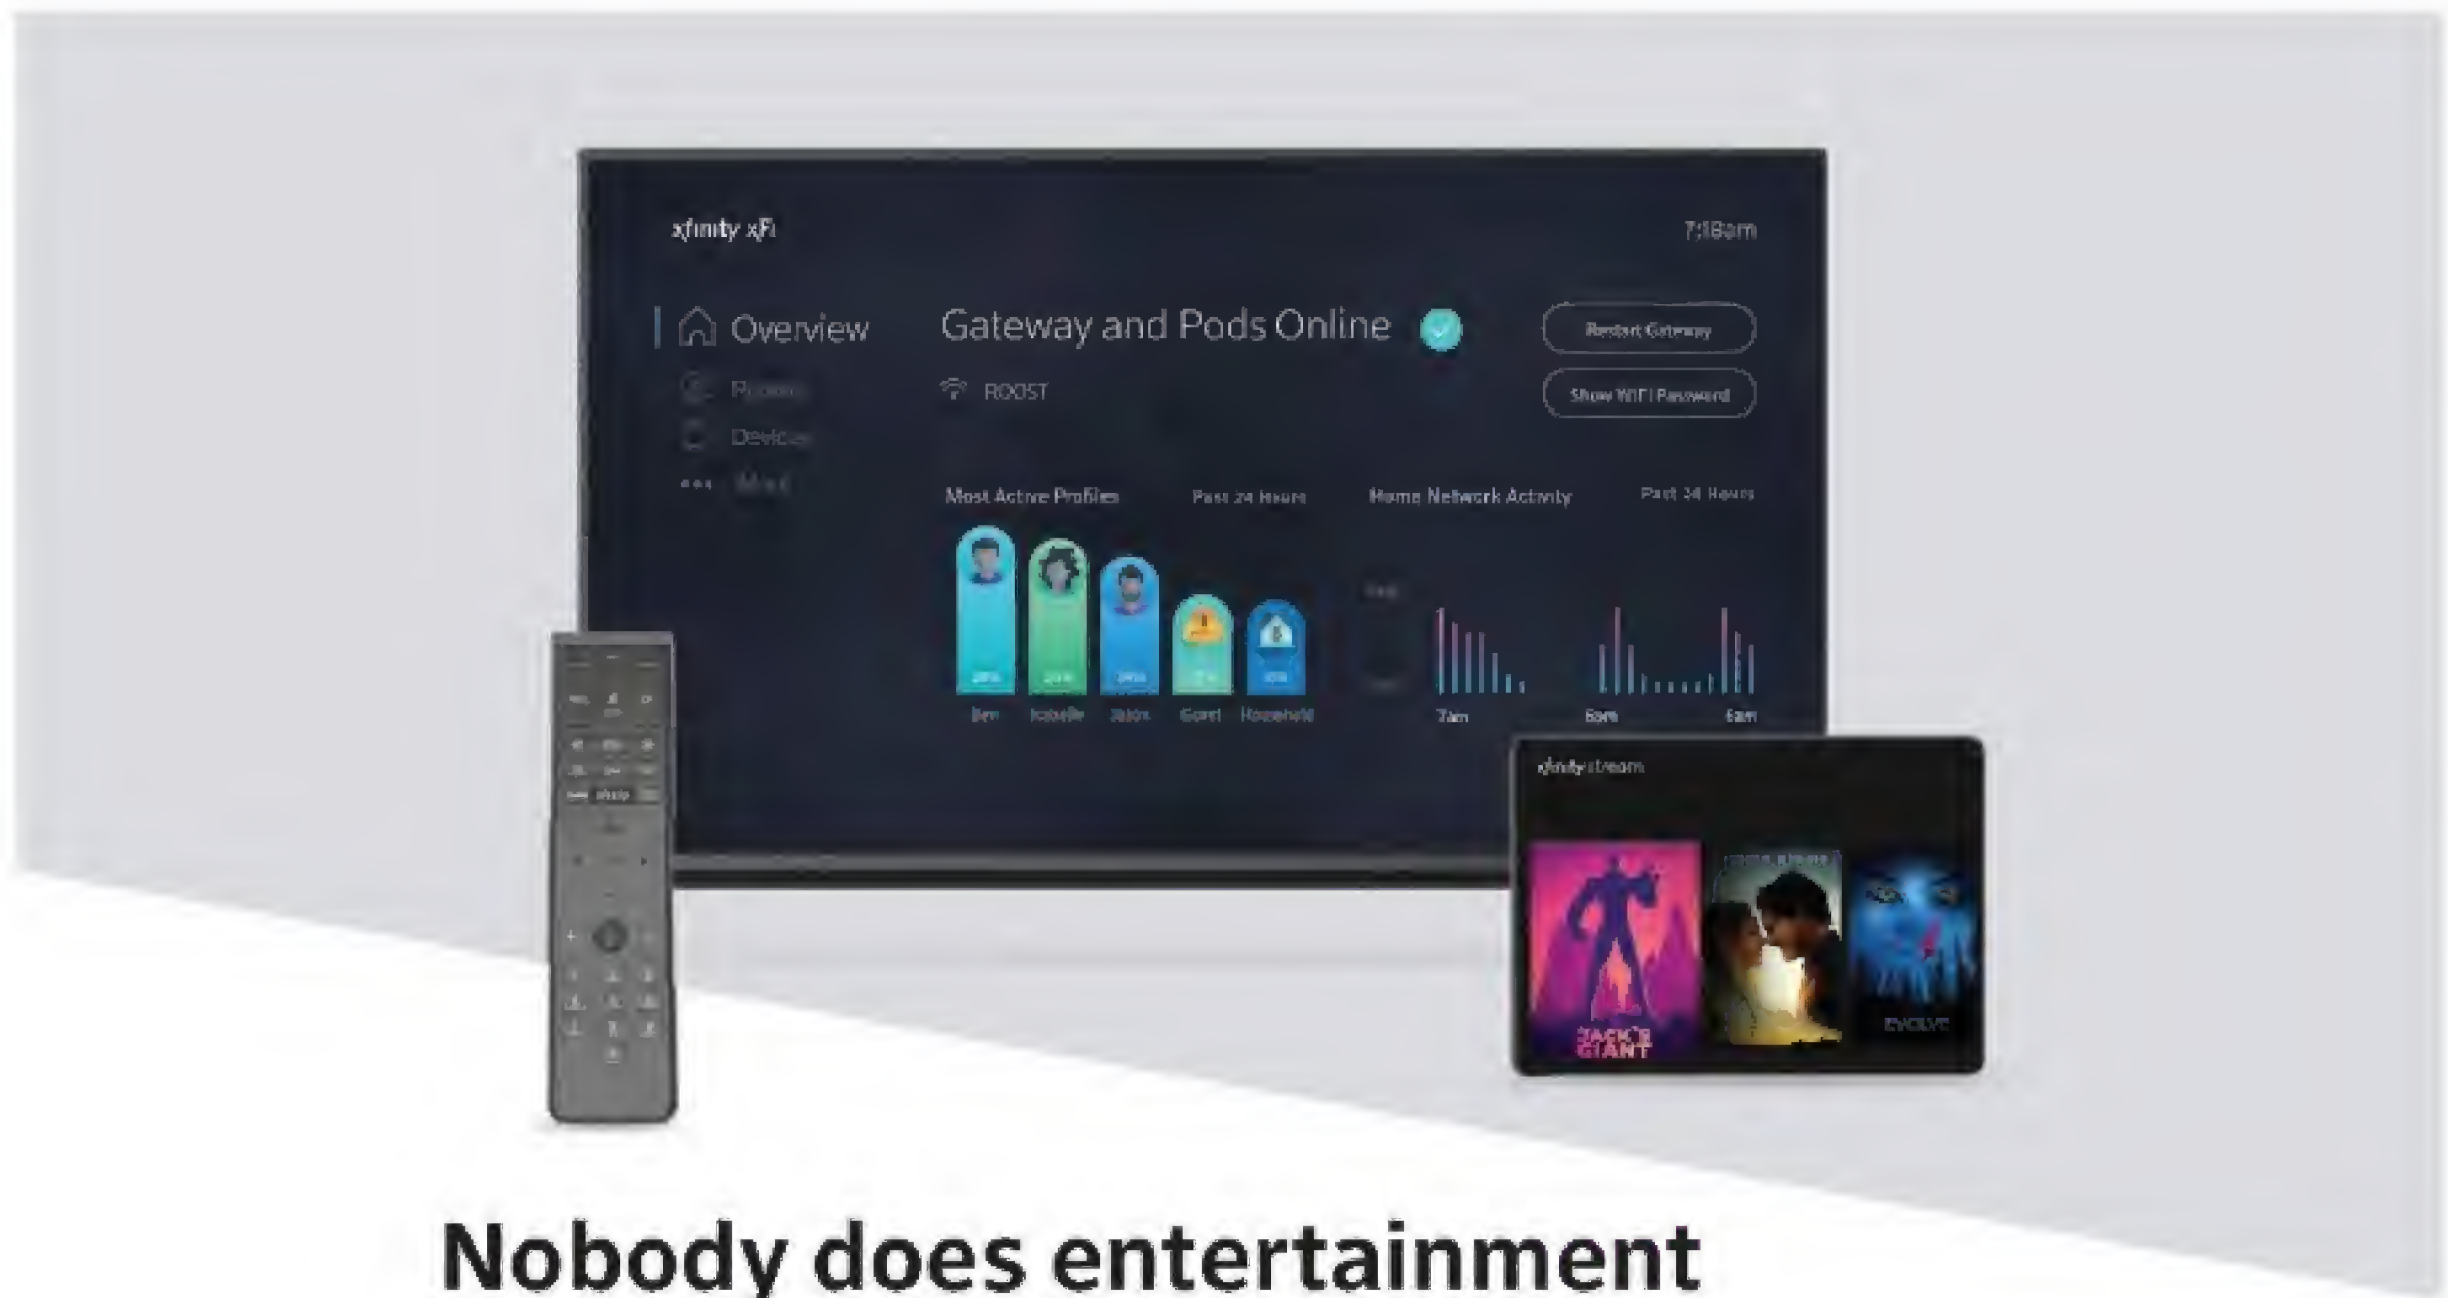

As writers, our necks cramp, our wrists get tight and our backs hunch (occupational hazard). If you work at any kind of office desk or do any kind of physical activity, we bet that you feel similarly. Swet Studio is introducing a Gentle Stretch class that shows you how to stretch with a silk hammock. The Gentle Stretch class aims to promote regular, full-body stretching that can increase flexibility, range of motion and posture, and reduce muscle soreness and back pain. The class is a beginner's level class, where a trained instructor will walk you through basic wraps, grips, and traps. March 31, Swet Studio, 480 Tremont St., swetstudio.com

The Paint Bar

The last item on our things-to-do-in-Boston list is The Paint Bar. Enjoy a day of painting with your kid or have a ladies' night out with some wine and a paintbrush! The Paint Bar supplies paint, aprons and helpful staff to assist your creativity. The pre-painting half-hour gives you a chance to get seated, get your paint and/or a drink, and relax. The session will last two-and-a-half hours, and seating is first-come, first-served. March 31, The Paint Bar, 823 Washington St., Newton, $29, thepaintbar.com

There have been numerous protests in the UK trying to get the government to hold another referendum or simply change their mind. JAMES LEYFIELD

The UK is in uncertainty following Brexit delay

Britons cannot get through a day without seeing or hearing the word Brexit now that the departure date of March 29 has been postponed and the government is searching for a way forward. Metro investigates the situation in the country.

JAMES LEYFIELD
jletters@metro.us

More than 30 million stepped into the polling booths on June 23, 2016, to decide whether Britain should remain in the European Union or leave. The world's best psychic couldn't have predicted the mess the country would be in nearly three years later.

A nation divided—51.9 percent voted to leave the EU, with 48.1 percent wanting to stay—a political crisis was born, and the public are still suffering.

With their lives now overrun by the dreaded B-word—what do Britons really think about Brexit?

In London, you'll be met by more people who voted to Remain than Leave, with 59.9 percent of Londoners wishing to stay in the EU.

Since June 24, 2016, Remainers have tried to get the government to hold another referendum or simply change their mind. Prime Minister Theresa May—who stepped in after David Cameron gave Britain the vote and then resigned days after the shock result—is determined to arrange a deal.

There have been numerous marches to Parliament, including the biggest yet, organised by The People's Vote campaign, on March 23 this year, which saw one million people demanding another referendum.

There was a determined yet almost jovial atmosphere among most of the campaigners who gathered on London's Park Lane before heading to Parliament, while some hurled rallying cries with loud speakers.

"Brexit is nothing but a right-wing, xenophobic lie," one shouted.

Peter and Margaret West, both 69, made the 320-km trip from Leeds to London to plead with the prime minister to give Britons a vote on her deal.

"Hopefully Mrs. May will realize that democracy actually means giving people a say on whether they want her deal, because we've already got a better deal—the one we currently have," Peter said.

He added: "Nobody really knew what Leave meant. Nobody with any sanity should think it would be better sat outside taking the rules than sat inside making the rules."

Charlotte Dart, 27, a copywriter from Reading, fears the only conclusion from Brexit will be "disaster" and worries she will struggle to get medicine if Britain leaves the EU.

She stated: "We were horribly lied to by the Leave campaign, and yet we're still going ahead with it. I don't want to live in an England where I'm going to have to panic about getting medicine because the borders are shut."

As well as marches, there have been countless online petitions, including the recent Revoke Article 50 and Remain in the EU, which has amassed more than five million signatures.

But one common opinion between many voters is despair at the distinct lack of progress made by politicians.

Jay Roberts, 30, a London-based finance manager, commented: "It's becoming tiresome listening to the politicians' arguments every day with no real plan or ideas about how to improve the situation.

"The politicians supposedly looking after the population have turned to looking after themselves with personal agendas outweighing the nation's best interests.

"Brexit is going to have a serious impact on the country and it seems to be a bit of a joke, causing a divide in the population, showing people's worst sides, be that the rise of far-right views of some parties, or the name calling of the left wing, presuming all who voted out are racists."

In the month after the vote, Home Office figures showed hate crimes increased by a staggering 41 per cent as people's frustrations boiled over.

Conservative former Minister Andrew Percy told MPs in December that some of his Leave-voting constituents, from East Yorkshire, have been branded "racists, stupid and too northern."

The vote has already caused damage for numerous companies, due to the uncertainty surrounding what sort of deal, if any, Britain might end up with.

London-based Jay, who works for a major international organisation with offices all over the world, said: "Prior to the vote my company had plenty of deals on the table which were all shelved afterwards. The continued uncertainty hasn't brought back the deals we expected."

The 51.9 percent who voted to Leave are also frustrated—of being told they didn't know what they were voting for.

Diane James, 59, a Member of the European Parliament for The Brexit Party, explained: "I am sick and tired of the Remainers saying that we didn't know what we were voting for. It was made very clear that Brexit meant leaving the single market."

Harry Edwards, 31, a farm consultant and Christmas tree grower, agrees, adding: "Having spoken and debated with both Brexiteers and Remainers the vast majority knew what they wanted and did not believe the propaganda on both sides."

"The EU has become an all-consuming, unaccountable machine. Its ability to be flexible has been lost. Uncontrolled immigration is like having a house party with an open invite on social media. Migration is essential and healthy for any country, but it is about control and accountability.

"The main concern is the overwhelming majority of MPs voted Remain during the referendum and they are looking at Brexit as a damage-limitation exercise."

Despite the uncertainty, there is still confidence positive change can be achieved.

"To fully realize the benefits of Brexit, the UK government needs to understand why people voted to leave," said Harry. "The issue with many who argue for remaining within the EU is they are blinkered and do not look forward. The direction of the EU is clear: closer political and monetary union. Do we want this? No."

Brexit is even contributing to marriage breakdowns, according to UK psychotherapist Patricia Hunt, and a recent poll found 41 percent claim their standard of living is worse following the vote.

Britain was supposed to leave the EU on March 29 but EU leaders agreed to a delay, so April 12 looks a likely date if MPs reject the withdrawal deal, with May 22 penciled in if MPs approve the deal.

Whatever happens, the world is looking at Britain and laughing, and people want answers. Now.

DAVID STRANG,
European law expert

What was the biggest mistake made by the UK government?

The government should have canvassed opinion across the parties before deciding on a negotiating strategy, rather than trying to gather support after the event for arrangements negotiated by the government alone for nearly two years.

What are the disadvantages of Brexit?

Brexit disadvantages have become clearer—the country will have to have some form of customs checks, reduce immigration at a time when there are no "spare" workers in the UK. Who is going to fill all the millions of service sector jobs?

What about the benefits?

The benefits are more nebulous. We will regain the unfettered power to make our own laws, but will, in practice, have to follow EU rules in many areas. We will also have control over immigration, but it's unclear if reducing immigration substantially will be feasible economically.

Could another referendum happen?

Polls suggest that another referendum would go the other way, but referendums are a poor way to decide on such a complex topic. Perhaps leaving this to Parliament, where the subject can be debated in detail, is the right way forward.

What to expect in the future?

It's impossible to say what Britain's future relationship with the EU will look like, but almost all economists believe if we end up not being in the customs union / single market this will have negative effect on the economy.

Luenell Campbell talks Showtime's new show "Funny Women Of A Certain Age"

MOLLY GIVEN
Molly.Given@metro.us

If you're a fan of insanely uninhibited, raw and relatable comedy, Showtime has got the show for you. The network partnered with comedian Carole Montgomery to break barriers with "Funny Women of a Certain Age." The show features all women, all over the age of 50 and all fabulous.

Luenell Campbell is one of the talented female comics gracing the stage with her stand-up and she gave Metro the scoop on what to expect from the new show, how 50 is the new 35 and why women in comedy still need to fight for the opportunities they deserve.

Luenell Campbell stars in Showtime's new all-female driven comedy show. ALL PHOTOS GETTY IMAGES

How did you get involved with "Funny Women at a Certain Age"?

Purely because Carole Montgomery—who is the brainchild of all of this—reached out to me. I wasn't real familiar with her before, but she reached out to me and that's how I got involved.

What were your initial thoughts when you heard the show was an all-female cast?

I was very much on board. Because this has never been done before— all females over

50. That's the important thing to note because that's why it's called "Funny Women Of A Certain Age." I was very excited about that because I feel that we have to put good images out there about what 50 looks like these days. 50 is not 80, 50 is not 90, 50 is more like 35 or 40. That's the new 50, and I thought that was very exciting.

Do you think there is still a stigma regarding female comedians?

There's a huge stigma still. Just the fact that they still think women don't draw people in. I sell out a lot of places that I go too. They think women are not as funny as guys and they certainly don't pay us what we're worth.

Throughout the years, how has your comedy changed?

I think that after having a child and being married and getting older, having ailments set in and weight set in—my comedy is more relatable now than it ever was.

What are some of your career high points and low points?

Well, high points have always been working with wonderful people that you admire and have looked at and never thought you would get to meet. Working with Sandra Bullock, working with Adam Sandler, working with Sacha Baron Cohen and working with Will Packer who did "Think Like A Man" 1 and 2 and all the stars involved with that film. Also doing voice-over work for animation, acquiring my residency in Las Vegas recently—those have been very high points for me. Some of the low points have been being a mother and missing my daughter's prom, not being around when she was sick, not being around when the time came to fill out paperwork for college, things like that have been the low points to me.

Everyone in the cast is extremely talented; Carole Montgomery knocked it out of the park with the lineup. Are there any female comedians you would bring in if you made your own lineup?

Sure, I could name people that you probably don't know exactly who they are.

I like this Christian comedian named, well we used to call her Small Fry, her name now changed to Small Fire.

She's the funniest Christian comic I have ever heard in my entire life—she's so funny. I'm also a fan of Torrey Hart, who is Kevin Hart's ex-wife. I like Sherri Shepherd and Kym Whitley. I'm not sure if they're exactly women I would put on tour if I used them together but they are

"I was very excited about that because I feel that we have to put good images out there about what 50 looks like these days. Fifty is not 80, 50 is not 90. Fifty is more like 35 or 40. That's the new 50, and I thought that was very exciting."

certainly women that I admire and like.

You know, I do have to say if I really had to put my dream team together, part of it can't happen because Joan Rivers is already gone. But I would have Joan Rivers, and I would have Roseanne—all the politics excluded and just the comedy of yesteryear. So Joan and Roseanne and myself—and maybe Marsha Warfield, who's very funny and also has a residency in Las Vegas right now. I like the older comics anyway, more so than the newer ones.

Overall what can audiences expect from the show?

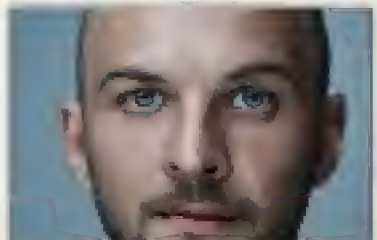

I think the title says it, just funny women of a certain age. It depends on the audience that you're speaking to but I hope everyone will watch it, men included. This is not a show done by women only for women, this is a show done by women for everyone. It's just funny, it's not for straight people, it's not for gay people, not for black or white. It's just funny and everybody can benefit from watching it and find out that there are funny women out here who are making a steady living talking into a microphone.

We're not written off, we're not down in the valley or any of that. We're alive, vivacious, exciting women who have something to say that is relatable to everyone.

"We have never stopped progressing" BRING ME THE HORIZON

The British rock band has released a new album titled Amo, and they are ready to go on tour.

Bring Me The Horizon is out promoting their most recent studio album, in which they move away from their aggressive musical style to embrace sounds closer to pop and electronica.

The album achieved a nomination for the 2019 Grammys, and these Brits are ready for their First Love Tour.

Composed by Oliver Sykes, Lee Malia, Matt Kean, Matt Nicholls and Jordan Fisch, the band began its career in 2004 with a strong influence from metalcore and deathcore. Today, considered one of the most explosive rock bands in the UK, Bring Me The Horizon has sold two million albums worldwide to date.

Matt Nichols, band drummer, chatted with Metro on how they have transformed through music.

What things have not changed between you guys?

I think we have never stopped progressing, although everyone has their ideas and beliefs, we are still as creative as the first day. We still have the same vibe between us, and we continue to understand each other perfectly.

Love is a very powerful weapon; how do you reflect that in your music?

Everything is always about love, it is a vehicle to reach people, we always do it in different measures.

How does a band survive the changes in the music industry today?

We have had to learn to live with it, and take advantage of the tool called the internet, which is another way to actually manage the industry, instead of producing physical albums, you can have a whole album much cheaper and more compact, easier and faster, so if you can use this tool in your favor, that's how you can (and should) survive.

If you could make your own festival, what sounds would it include?

I really like the idea of a multicultural festival, apart from rock, genres like hip hop, electronic music among others, more than bands, I would like a lot of diversity for all types of audiences.

Commuters of the Commonwealth, be warned: The Tobin Bridge is about to undergo its first large-scale repair project since the 1970s.

MassDOT announced the start of a rehabilitation project of the surface of the Tobin Bridge which will require northbound lane closures starting on April Fool's Day. They predict significant traffic impacts on the Tobin Bridge and Chelsea Curves section of Route 1, and warn of nightmarish travel times for drivers and MBTA bus customers.

MassDOT's traffic modeling predicts that Route 1 northbound on the lower level will have significant delays, and that afternoon peak travel times will extend as a result. Traffic backups are expected to extend onto the I-93 ramps, along the Leverett Connector, and toward Rutherford Avenue.

Two of the three northbound lanes on the 79-year-old cantilever truss bridge will remain open during the day, and only one will remain open overnight. The same lane closures will go into effect for southbound lanes starting May 1 in the Chelsea Curves area. The same clustered frustration can be expected for morning peak travel hours on the upper level southbound lanes, with backups expected to extend to the Route 60 Rotary in Salem, and could potentially extend beyond Salem Street during rush hour.

"MassDOT is carrying out simultaneous work on this infrastructure, which was constructed in the middle of the 20th century and hasn't been rehabilitated since the 1970s, in order to ensure its continued use and reliability and minimize the overall impact on commuters and the local community," Highway Administrator Jonathan Gulliver said in a statement posted on MassDOT's website.

The department estimates that fixing both of the 36-foot-wide lanes on New England's largest bridge simultaneously will wrap in 2021.

The T will increase its number of Blue Line trains to help stem the stymied tides of travelers, and will offer free fares for inbound direction on the SL3 bus line offered at the Chelsea, Bellingham Square, Box

District and Eastern Avenue stops throughout construction.

"During construction, free fares are being offered for Silver Line 3 (SL3) inbound customers at certain station stops and additional Blue Line train capacity is being added. T riders will be able to use their CharlieCards to travel between North Station and Chelsea on the Commuter Rail," MBTA General Manager Steve Poftak said in a statement.

MassDOT is also recommending commuters take the Haverhill or Newburyport/Rockport Commuter Rail lines, noting the high parking capacity at Haverhill and Bradford stations, as well as the Newburyport/Rockport Line historically having high parking capacity at the Newburyport, Salem and Lynn stations.

Christof Putzel demands the truth on Travel Channel's 'Mission Declassified'

The celebrated journalist tells us about his new show and the big questions he's dying to answer.

PAT KING
patrick.king@metro.us

Journalist Christof Putzel doesn't like not being able to see the whole picture. Through almost 20 years as an investigative journalist and documentarian, most notably with Current TV and Al Jazeera, his work has taken him all over the globe in search of answers to some of life's unanswered questions. With his new show on Travel Channel, "Mission Declassified," Putzel continues this work by looking back at some of history's most frustrating unanswered cold cases such as the escape from Alcatraz, the real identity of hijacker D.B. Cooper, and the Lindbergh baby kidnapping.

According to Putzel, he was pretty apprehensive at first when he was approached to do the show.

"I've been an investigative journalist for almost 20 years now and I've done documentaries from around the world in all kinds of news," says Putzel. "I was working with this production company who had this idea of doing the show on Travel Channel, which would be me looking into cold cases. Some of the most famous cases like D.B. Cooper, escape from Alcatraz. My reaction at first, to be perfectly honest, was 'Come on, are we really breaking the table with these stories that have been looked at so many times before?'"

All of Putzel's skepticism started to wash away as he and his team started to research their first assignment: The escape from Alcatraz. In their findings, they were able to find evidence debunking the long-held belief that prisoners Frank Morris and brothers John and Clarence Anglin had drowned as they tried to swim ashore to the San Francisco Bay after breaking free from the prison in the summer of 1962. Putzel and his team were able to find — through declassified FBI files, their own findings, and other sources — evidence placing these convicts in Brazil after their escape and even traveled abroad to chase down their leads.

While Putzel is tirelessly making his way through the backlog of some of the world's most infamous unsolved mysteries, are there any cold cases that he would like to see solved during his lifetime? That is, if he can't get to them on his show, of course. With so many choices, Putzel feels obligated to do his family proud.

"I think one story that I've been passionate about for my whole life that we actually got to dig into was the Lindbergh baby kidnapping," explains Putzel. "My grandfather [Samuel G. Blackman] broke that story and went to his grave believing that he got it correct. That it was this one guy and he alone kidnapped the baby and he was the one who it was pinned on, and he got electrocuted for it. I've always wanted to look into it and say 'okay, then why is it so controversial?' That's why it was so interesting going back to digging into this, what he was working with at the time. Going into his mindset of being this 27-year-old journalist who at the time was covering the biggest celebrity in the world in the trial of the century, and the pressure of being the only journalist and witness of the guy being executed that the crime was pinned on. Just having that on his conscience for the rest of his life, you know, I think it takes the passage of time to go look in and revisit some of these stories. And that one we're still trying to get to the bottom of. I think we've moved the needle quite a ways."

New episodes of "Mission Declassified" premiere on Travel Channel every Sunday at 10 p.m.

Can Red Sox become a dynasty?

The pieces are there for multiple titles in a row.

MATT BURKE
matthew.burke@metro.us

It's a first-world sports problem, for sure, but the Boston Red Sox haven't won back-to-back World Series titles in 103 years.

The Sox have won four championships this century, yes, but we tend to get greedy in Boston. Why can't we have a bona fide baseball dynasty here like we had back when Woodrow Wilson was president?

Truth be told, back-to-back titles don't happen often in Major League Baseball. The late-1990s Yankees were the last MLB franchise to accomplish the feat, and before that, the early-'90s Blue Jays won in consecutive years. The

The Red Sox are five months removed from winning the World Series.

BILLIE WEISS/BOSTON RED SOX

Blue Jays were the first back-to-back champions in baseball since the late 1970s Yankees. So typically, this sort of thing only happens every 15 to 20 years or so. We're due for a repeat champion in baseball.

Why not the Red Sox? They're absolutely loaded again, bringing back almost all of their franchise record 108-game winning team. They have arguably the best 1-2 punch in baseball in Chris Sale and

David Price. They have the reigning American League MVP in Mookie Betts coming back, as well as JD Martinez, who finished fourth in

MVP voting and second in MLB home runs hit last season with 43.

It is baseball, of course, so several players who were red-hot in 2018 are bound to see some slippage in performance this season. The key for the Red Sox will be to get career years out of some different faces.

Maybe this is the year Andrew Benintendi puts it all together. Benintendi saw his home run and RBI totals dip slightly last season (20 to 16 homers, 90 to 87 RBIs) but he's still only 24 years old and hasn't even scratched the surface of his potential. One change that could benefit "Benny" is that Alex Cora is bumping Betts down to the No. 2 slot in the batting order and is putting Benintendi in the lead-off spot.

The Sox will also need a better year in 2018 out of third baseman Rafael Devers if they plan on going anywhere. Devers was pegged as a breakout performer for Boston at this time last year but he mostly disappointed in his first full MLB season, giving up a ton of playing time to Eduardo Nunez. Nunez returns as insurance if Devers again can't find his groove, and the veteran infielder saw considerable playing time at shortstop during spring training.

Nunez could spell Xander Bogaerts at short if Bogaerts has any sort of regression. As Red Sox fans are far too well aware, Bogaerts looks like an MVP candidate during some stretches but then can look completely lost for a month. Bogaerts had his best season as a pro last year when he blasted 23 homers and drove in 103 runs, both of which were over double from his performance in 2017. There is legit concern that the 26-year-old could take a step back.

Rafael Devers is entering his second full MLB season.

Game 1 of 162

The arduous 162-game slate for the Sox begins tonight in Seattle (7 p.m., NESN), with the first game at Fenway set for Tuesday, April 9, against Toronto.

The Red Sox will send ace Chris Sale (12-4, 2.11 ERA in 2018) to the mound this evening with the Mariners countering with Marco Gonzales (13-9, 4.00 ERA in 2018).

Boston actually lost with Sale on the mound on Opening Day last year, falling 6-4 to Tampa Bay. It was no fault of the Sox's star lefty as he did not allow a run and gave up just one hit through six innings. Sale typically gets off to hot starts each season as he had a 2.79 ERA through one month last season and a 1.19 ERA through one month the year prior.

This will actually be Gonzales' second regular-season start this year as the Mariners southpaw beat the A's in Japan last week, going six innings and giving up just three runs on seven hits.

Mookie Betts belted a career-high 32 home runs last season.
